My short trip to India

I went to India with a couple of my best friends but it was a short trip. We stayed there for 7 days and travelled by plane.

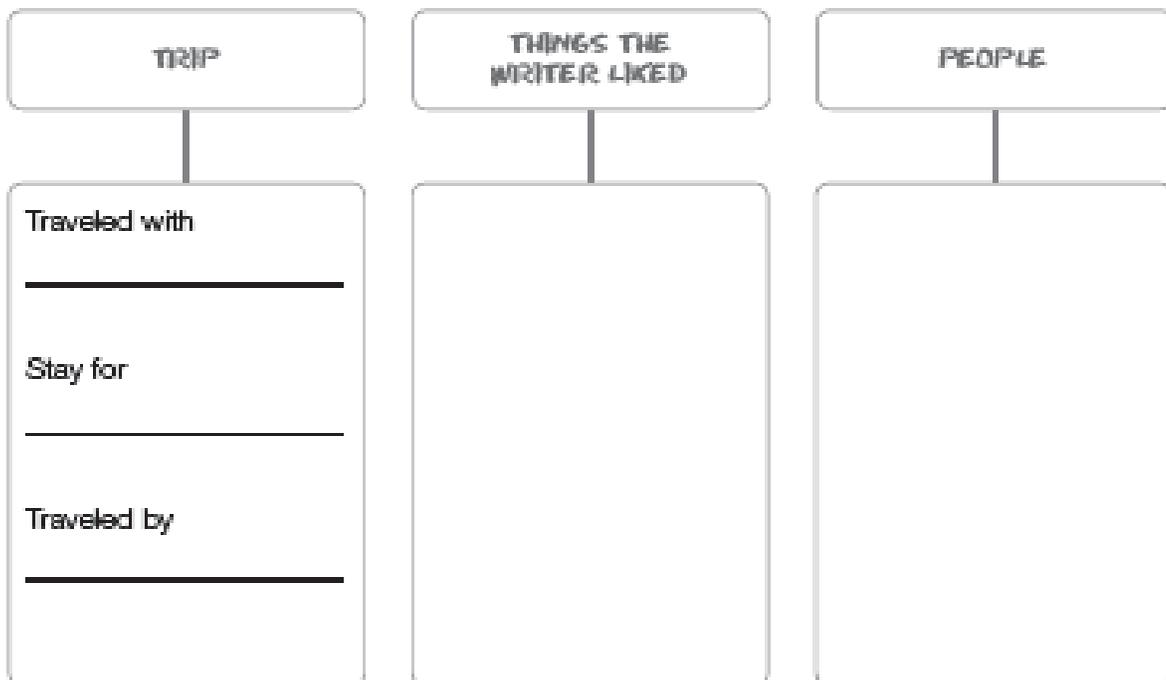

I liked this country very much because I experienced a feeling of total freedom. There was a special connection with nature in India because there were a lot of animals walking freely through the streets, even in very urban places like Mumbai. But India is a land of contrasts as everyone says. You can see extremely poor and extremely rich people. However, people in India are really happy.

Indians work a lot and many people work on Sundays. Things happened all the time around you. There were people offering you things, fixing things or painting their stores. In Mumbai there were many bookshops where you could find best sellers.

What I like the most in India were rickshaws. These are small vehicles pulled by one person on foot or on a bicycle that transport tourists.

I really miss India.

I like this place because it's a beautiful and ancient city. Seville is located in the south of Spain. It is the capital of Andalusia.

People in Seville are calm and happy. The city is interesting and wonderful and has a very hot summer. You can visit a lot of fascinating places in Seville, where you can learn from its culture, especially the Islamic culture. This is because, in ancient times, Seville was a city of Al-Andalus, part of the territory occupied by the Muslim empire in Southern Spain.

There are a lot of Islamic monuments in Seville, like the Torre del Oro. But not everything you can see in Seville is from Islamic culture. There are also a lot of attractions that you can visit, like the Cathedral, an UNESCO world heritage site.

The Cathedral's tower is called La Giralda, and it is the most famous symbol in Seville. Apart from monuments, Seville is related to flamenco, a kind of music originated in Andalusia. Another important event in Seville is 'Seville Fair'.

For all these reasons, I like Seville. I would like to live there one day.
